March Of Flowers To Silent City

Throughout the broad realm under the Stars and Stripes today there gathered millions to do honor to the memory of their dead; to the dead that died in the struggle of brother against brother in that civil war of almost half a century ago that staggered the world with its bitterness.

Time has buried bitterness; no longer is there any question of right or wrong, only of results.

Critics may carp and the poets of North and South may sing ever so sweetly each of his own idea, but the fact remains that whatever of cruel fight there was is over long ago, and it is to the memory of all who fought and bled and died that this thirtieth day of May is consecrated in lovingness for bravery, fearlessness, sincere conviction and the ever living dead.

No place in all the world can stage a ceremony, such as this day calls for, as can Hawaii, rainbow land of multitudinous flowers, Paradise of the Pacific, jeweled with a thousand living ornaments of perfumed nature.

In spite of rain, steady, drenching rain, hundreds marched or rode or walked to the historic vale of old Nuanu, where stand the temples and monuments of the departed; where lie the bones of soldiers and of friends and loved ones; where repose all earthly remains of near and dear ones gone before.

Aside from the pomp and ceremony of the martial exhibition in honor of sleeping warriors, hundreds of widows, orphans and death-disconsolate citizens and women and children strung out a long, flower-burdened procession to the silent city on the hill, the while the heavens wept and softened the sods beneath which lie the earthly envelopes of souls set free in realms the living cannot yet comprehend.

PROCESSION UNDER WAY.

Day broke, obscured by clouds, dripping, drenching clouds. All night three score and more native daughters had remained awake along the much frequented path of Hotel street between Nuanu and Fort, twining leis, twisting wreaths, arranging set pieces of lilies, carnations, roses and all the flowers that bloom in fair Hawaii, ready against the day when the rush would come for floral memories.

And at break of dawn the purchasers, men and women and children, carted, automobilized, and afoot, sought the market of buds and blossoms, and bought most generously.

Early there started for the cemetery the procession planned for this occasion. Organizing at the drill shed, the line of march, at 9 o'clock started from the drill shed on Hotel and Miller streets, and went down Alakea street to King, thence to Fort, thence to School, thence to Nuanu, and so to the cemetery. Returning, though all did not get in line who went up to the cemetery, the procedure was down Nuanu to School, School to Fort, down Fort to Vineyard, thence to Emma, passing in review at the corner of Emma and Beretania.

Being marshal of the parade, E. S. Barry led off with the Hawaiian band, conducted by Berger, who played all the old inspiring tunes. Then came the veterans, armed with flowers and wearing the numerous badges, medals and insignia to which their bravery in times past entitled them.

Thousands lined the streets to see the procession pass, in spite of the incessant drizzle. Women were decked for a fair day, wearing white stockings, white shoes and white duck skirts, many of them. A few had brought out umbrellas, but there were many who got thoroughly wet. Sentiment for the occasion will, perhaps, prevent colds, and coughs, but not unless the usual course of nature is checked. There seemed to be an enthusiasm which ignored any inclemency in

NEW YORK, May 30.—Gifford Pinchot has returned from Europe where he had several conferences with ex-President Roosevelt.

The world will little note nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."
